

Parents would like to think that their children are safe when they put them in the care of others. Unfortunately, that is not always the case. The people that dedicate their lives to children in daycares and schools are teachers and professional caregivers, they are not trained to handle life-and-death emergencies. That is why the AngelWatch National Accreditation Program was created.

The accreditation is recognized by the Department of Homeland Security and by the American Red Cross to make sure that Safety and Security is of the utmost importance when it comes to protecting your children.

States mandate minimum training when it comes to Safety and Security, that is including basic CPR and first aid training. The criteria that the state mandates let's each Center make their own emergency procedures and then it is approved by the state. Unfortunately, the people that are involved in daycares, preschools and Early Learning Centers are not trained in these types of training.

There are very few state-mandated courses.

The reason why? There are no "cookie cutter" techniques or training that can be done in a facility. Each facility is different, each facilities classroom is different, there is no way that they can give such trainings.

One of the reasons why they can't give the training as they have no one qualified to do it.

No matter how hard we try or how a state would want to, there are not sufficient qualified personnel to do such specialized training for every Center.

As an AngelWatch National Accredited Center, Our Center will be receiving annual training in
